Courses

HUM STUD 100. Global Challenges and the Human Experience. 3 Credits.

In an increasingly interconnected world, understanding the complexities of global challenges is essential. This course explores the multifaceted issues that shape our world today and encourages students to explore how these challenges impact diverse communities and individuals. Through an interdisciplinary approach that places an emphasis on human stories, the course will highlight the resilience and adaptability of people facing these global issues in their historical, philosophical, literary, and artistic contexts. The course aims to foster critical thinking, empathy, and a sense of global citizenship. Topics vary and may include climate change and environmental sustainability, global democracy and democratic movements, gender and sexuality in global perspective, and the promise and challenge of technology, among others. Course is not repeatable for credit.

HUM STUD 227. Cultivating Creativity. 3 Credits.

From the arts to the sciences, creativity is foundational to the human experience. And though it arises from the mechanisms of mind and body, it is not fixed by biology. Rather, creativity is a way of seeing and being in the world that is seeded in experience, cultivated through practice, and nurtured in reflection. Examining practitioner-based reports from your favorite creative giants through psychological, sociological, and practical models of creativity, this course dissects the myth of genius to develop individualized creative practices grounded in experience, framed through theory, and backed by science. After a semester of exploration, play, and invention, you will find yourself a more inspired, imaginative, and joyful practitioner of art and life alike.

Fall Only.

HUM STUD 230. Comics, Society, and Culture. 3 Credits.

This course examines comic books in American and global culture and society. Comics appeal to many Americans because they speak to our hopes and dreams, to our fears and desires, they investigate our politics and our social conflicts and examine important philosophical issues. This course will introduce students to this medium and to its interactions with other media, and in doing so, it will ask students to confront issues concerning history, media, society, gender, ethnicity, class, creativity, and other issues in our culture.

Fall and Spring.

HUM STUD 240. Film and the Community. 1 Credit.

This 1cr course is designed to bridge the gap between study of film and the film as a community art. Students are able to fulfill the requirements of this course in a number of ways: attend all of the free screenings of the Green Bay Film Society's International Film Series offered at the Neville Public Museum; volunteer with the Green Bay Film Festival or become involved with another film and community arts type program. HUM STUD 370. Sustainability through the Humanities. 3 Credits.

This course offers a critical exploration of the problem of sustainability from the perspective of the humanities, including history, First Nations Studies, literature, and philosophy. The problem of environmental sustainability has at least as much to do with our cultures, histories, languages, and philosophies as it does with more concrete factors such as resource usage and pollution. To the extent that humanistic disciplines help us to expand and broaden how we comprehend the natural world, so too might they provide us with essential resources and tools with which to imagine and mount broad and value-infused solutions. This course will include a digital and public humanities project.
